Biometric Positive Identification System

The cafeteria uses a biometric positive ID system. The system uses a finger touch pad to positively identify a student. All new students will have their fingers scanned the first week of school. During the scan, a template image is created that forms intersection points; once the images and intersection points are verified, the individual record is converted to a set of numbers that are used as the student's ID. The system only remembers and processes numbers for each student. The positive ID system does not store a fingerprint; the system creates a numeric template image where there is no possibility of reverse identification or forensic application in the form of a fingerprint.
